

NCWO Womens Health Task Force

The National Council of Women's Organizations' Women's Health Task Force comprises 18 organizations that support the work of NCWO member organizations to advance women's health and to promote NCWO's healthcare policy agenda.

Women have their own special healthcare needs – whether they're related to reproductive health or to health conditions that affect everyone. They are also the gatekeepers to their family's health and are the primary consumers of healthcare in America. The Task Force wants women and organizations to use the health and policy information on this website to become active and engaged advocates for the health of women throughout the United States. The Task Force also seeks to provide a place where women can easily find information on health, and apply this information to an overall health and wellness plan for themselves and their families.

The National Association of Mothers' Centers and its MOTHERS Initiative encourages you to visit the websites and take advantage of this very important resource.